
COMMISSIONER'S RECORD

Introduction

The record acquired from the office of the then Chief Commissioner in Sindh is generally known as Commissioner's Record. It is a rich source of informational, historical, monetary and evidential value pertaining to Sindh. The British Government established record rooms for the preservation of archives in the subcontinent. All the records preserved in the record room were of the Commissioner's Offices . It was the prime government office in Sindh working under Bombay Presidency.

History

In the Record room of the Commissioner Office, the arrangement and storage of earliest records started as early as 1831. The files were arranged chronologically on racks, numbered permanently. They were all in six ranges containing 62 racks which were again divided into 558 compartments. Each set of records was kept together and arranged according to the following arrangement (then called classification) adopted in the index or list of files:

 1. The Sind mission files containing papers describing events up to the battle of Meanee in 1843, and
 2. Records of Sir Charles James Napier about his administration in Sindh from 1843 to 1847 were kept separate from those subsequent to 1847. The basis of sub-arrangement was according to the nature of correspondence contained in them.
2. The perusal of records from 1843 to 1847 reveals that government work was not divided into departments. This practice continued up to October 1847 when Sir Charles James Napier retired and the province was annexed to Bombay Presidency. Through the appointment of Commissioner, the government work for the first time was divided in the departments in September 1847. Government business was distributed into three main departments as under:
 1. Revenue,
 2. Political, and
 3. General.

The records of English and Vernacular up to 1857 were kept in separate racks according to departments, Mr. Richardson prepared 192 manuscript files in 1913, and Indexes and catalogues of 212 files were made.

1. In 1851, an attempt was made under the orders of the Bombay Government to introduce the compilation system of keeping records both in the Commissioner's office and in the offices of the district officers. According to this system, certain fixed numbers were allotted to different subjects under departments. Each subject head was again divided into several sub-heads and papers relating to each subhead were filed chronologically in a white cover, the compilation being identified by numbers given to them in serial order. At the close of the year, all correspondences were scrutinized and bound together in volumes of equal thickness, selected after the appraisal. The files were kept without alphabetical arrangement. This compilation system was brought into force in 1857 and files had been arranged chronologically of each department for the periods 1857 to 1909 and 1910 to June 1922.
2. The Maxwell System of office procedure was introduced in the Commissioner's office in June 1922. Since then, the arrangement for keeping the files was completely altered. According to this system, a separate case on a subject was given to an individual number and the whole correspondence on the cases was kept in chronological order. A general index was prepared in which all cases belonging to the several departments of the office were entered. It was printed and a copy of it was kept in the record room for the purpose of reference. After sixty years when Sindh became an independent province on April 1, 1936 (Solvent, 1995, p-830), the practice of preserving record also went into oblivion. According to former. All the important record of general, judicial, political, public works and revenue departments preserved at Sindh Archives belong to pre 1920 era. All Commissioners offices in the subcontinent deposited their 20 years old records in the record rooms. When Sindh became the independent province, the process of depositing old record was stopped. The precious record preserved in the Record room was also neglected and laid in dark rooms without care from 1936 to 1992. Pakistan got independence and Karachi became the capital of the country in 1947. Consequently, a department of National Archives and Libraries was set up in 1949 under the Ministry of Education. When Islamabad became the capital, a Provincial Archives was built and after establishment there was a need to get archival record for preservation. The attention was paid to the neglected record. To take the care of this important record, it was handed over to Sindh Archives for preservation. Importance of Record

Most of the records are in English with only a few in Persian and Hindi. These records contain correspondence, circulars, directives, memorandas, exchange of notes, treaties, etc between the concerned agencies, i.e. President and Governor in Council, Chief Secretary to Government of Bombay, the Government of India, Colonel Pottenger, Meers of Sindh, Sir Charles James Napier, etc. When we look on the importance of this record in the history of province, only few references are worthy of mention:

1. Three finding aids which were prepared by the commissioner office, (a) Alphabetical catalogue of the contents of pre-mutiny records of the commissioner in Sindh-1857 in 1931, printed by the commissioner's printing press, Karachi, (b) A hand book of the Government records lying in the office of the commissioner in Sind and in district offices in 1933, published by commissioner printing press, and (c) Catalogue of files kept in the commissioner's office library from 1857 to 1909 (Zafar, 1990, p. 504).
2. The records of British period are well preserved in the IOLR in form of numerous reports. An important series of the reports was Annual Administrative Report of the Bombay Presidency from 1861-1933 and there were also annual administrative reports of each department of the province of Sindh. Another series of the reports was Revised Survey and Settlement Reports of each Taluka of the Province issued every 10th year since 1871 to 1932. The reports carried statistics on crops, crop areas, irrigation areas and population of each Taluka. The census reports besides statistics give important information on languages, ethnic groups, castes and tribes. All these reports are rare in Sindh Archives but are preserved in the IOLR London.

Details of Record
